The result of the campaign is, thus, of importance to us, as it will cause a change in the status quo, either by the consolidation of the power of Yakoob Beg or by the appearance of China-as an immediately concerned and important factor in the consideration of Central Asian politics. Whoever be successful, the maintenance of some settled and respectable Government in Eastern Turkestan tends to our advantage. The most ardent admirer of Yakoob Beg cannot deny that the Chinese Empire would present a preferable settlement of question to the continuance of a rule that is dependent on no recognised principles of just government, and that will pass away, in all probability, with the breath of its originator.

> The annual public meeting of the United Presbyterian Student's Theological Hall Missionary Society has been held in Queen street Hall, Edinburgh. Dr. Dudgeon, of the London Missionary Society, congratulated the Church on having at last seen its way to send a missionary to China. The great want in China was that the missionary societies should be more distributed, but that individuals should be concentrated. Mission stations should be centres of light—seminaries, so to speak; for though all the missionaries in the world were to go to Ohina they would not suffice to convert that country. That must be done by the Chinese themselves. The doctor went on to speak of the characteristics of the Chinese, their filial rever ence, their patience, sobriety, frugality, industry, and their high civilisation. The two foreign evils in Obina were Roman Catholicism and the opium trade. He saw no reason why it was exactly like Buddhism, the popularreligion in China; but for the fact of its foreign connection and political aims. Denouncing the opium trade, he said that we deliberately inflicted curses on China from a selfish-apprehension of ossible evils to our own country. Missions bad not been a failure in China, but a great success. more especially the medical missions.

Off went poor Campbell in a never saw him again; and I was not very sorry, for his sentimentality was too soft, and his craving for praise too morbld to let him be an agreeable companion. On occasion of the catastrophe, he came with about forty authors one morning, to sign a petition Parliament for an International copyright law. Then there was Babbage-less utterly dependent on opinion than some people suppose: but still harping so much on the subject as to warrant the severe judgment current in regard to his vanity. There was Edwin Landscor, a friendly and agreeable companion, but holding his cheerfulness at the mercy of great folks' graciousness to him: To see him enter a room curled and cravatted, and glancing round in guxiety about his reception, could not but make a woman wonder where among her own sex she could find a imore paipuote vanteet but soett, at their was him, seeing him play with the dog.
